RESEARCH AND DESIGN PROCESS

In a team of five, I contributed to a service and spatial redesign proposal for Zilvermeer, a recreational park in Mol, Belgium. The project explored how hospitality, public space and visitor services could work together to create a more engaging year-round experience, balancing visitor needs, stakeholder priorities and feasibility. We started doing a deep research on the client, the visitors and the tangible elements, to design with a clear objective.

THE CURRENT SITUATION

Zilvermeer depends heavily on the high season. When summer ends, visitor numbers drop and the horeca places struggle to keep running steadily. The park also lacks one clear identity, so walking through it feels fragmented and disconnected

FOCUS : GLINSTERING

With my group we focused on a specific horeca: Glinstering is a mid-century building in the "In the Woods" zone, set between the playground, the lake and the forest. Today it's a tavern, summer bar and event venue. It's busy in summer but underused the rest of the year. We saw it as the natural centre of a year-round social hub

PERSONAS AND STAKEHOLDER CO-CREATION

GOOD, BAD and WISH wall co-creation activity

Stakeholders interviews at co-creation

OUTCOME OF RESEARCH AND PERSONAS

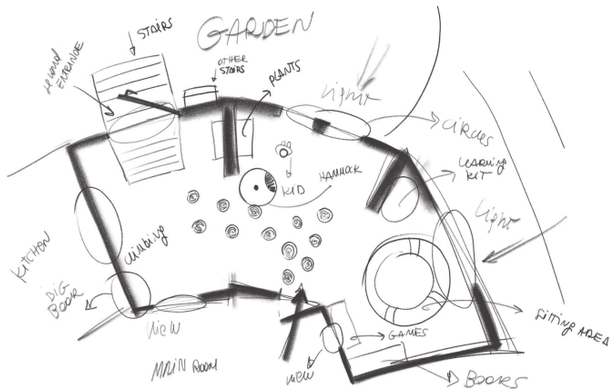

We used personas, future user journeys and service blueprints to map how families, nature seekers and workshop participants move through the zone. The aim was to link horeca, play and nature into one smooth experience in every season.

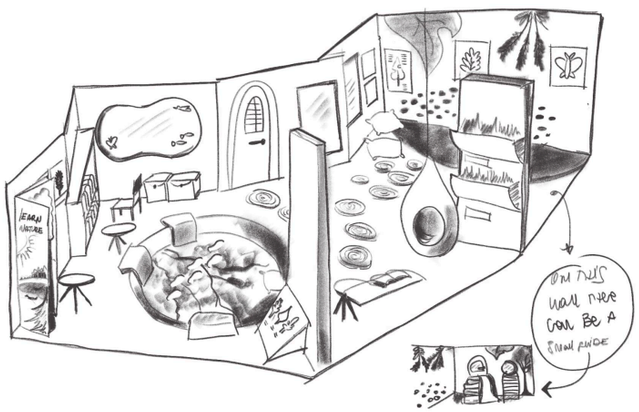

CO CREATION MATERIAL

I designed tools to bring stakeholders into the process, including a Good, Bad and Wish wall and guided interviews with my team. These sessions tested our ideas against real operational needs and helped shape a shared direction

CONCEPT ILLUSTRATION : REDESIGNING THE SERVICES

Second park entrance

New service: birthday parties

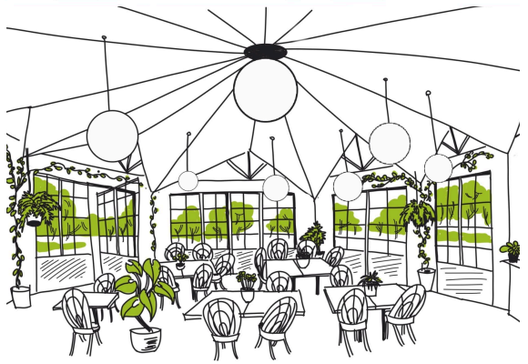

New space: Glinstering garden

New space: indoor play zone

New look: door windows

New activity: Garden workshops

NEW SPACES

- Indoor play zone: split into areas for active play, quiet observation and learning about Kempen nature.
- Workshop space: part of the restaurant, closed off with flexible curtains when needed.
- Glinstering garden: placed under a pre existent tent, full of herbs and with species from the Kempen.

NEW SERVICES

Nature-focused workshops, kids' camps in both high and low season, and birthday parties give families reasons to come back all year.
Routines that keep the winter and autumn alive: post run coffee break, sunday family brunch, pancake wednesday.

Partners like VELT, Natuurpunt and Toekomsthelden help run them, while Glinstering's kitchen adds a garden-to-table offer.

NEW ACTIVITIES

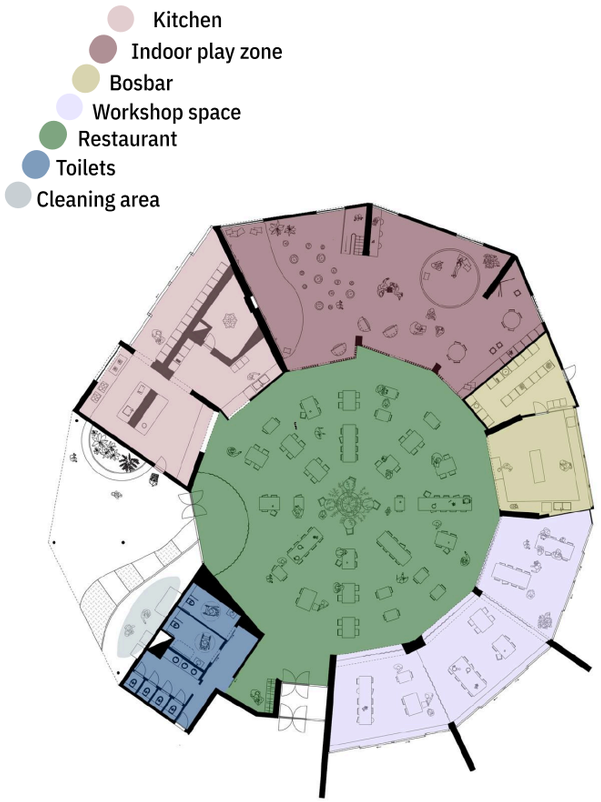

Nature workshops for families give people a reason to visit all year:

- Garden workshops: craft sessions on organic gardening, climate-smart landscaping and sustainable cooking.
- Indoor workshops: cooking with herbs or plant printing for up to 30 people. These give families a warm option on rainy days and in the low season.
- Outdoor workshops: learning to grow, harvest and care for native plants in the garden, under the tent and the forest trail.

HOW WILL THE SERVICE FEEL LIKE

PLANIMETRY OF GLINSTERING

The floor plan follows a clear route: entrance and cleaning area, toilets, restaurant, workshop space, Bosbar, indoor play zone and kitchen. Each space stays visually and functionally connected to the others.

RENDERS OF ENTRANCE AND BAR

At the entrance, visitors can clean muddy shoes, bikes, pushchairs and wheelchairs, and there's a planted bench for waiting or resting. The new Bosbar can be seen from both the restaurant and the terrace, and part of the counter is lowered for children and wheelchair users.

THE IMPACT OF GLINSTERING

Glinstering becomes a year-round community hub where families, locals and visitors meet around food, play and nature. Through social employment, people referred by VDAB work alongside experienced staff in the kitchen, at workshops and in the garden. They build skills there and move towards the regular labour market
